Major Blake's Route Differs Slightly From Smith's Plan

AVOID MONSOON

Entirely New Route Across Atlantic Will be Tried

(T.L.'s flight started Wednesday, May 24th.)

LONDON, May 13.—Major W. T. Blake, the aviation correspondent of the London Daily News, who has made plans for a flight around the world, along with Captain Norman McMillan, hopes to be ready to start at the end of May. The 30,000 mile world air flight is on much the same lines as had been planned by the late Sir Ross Smith, the famous Australian aviator, who was killed on April 13, but the route will differ from that decided upon by him in respect to the Atlantic and in regard to Burma.

The route to be followed will be via France, Italy, Greece and Crete to Egypt, and thence via Bagdad and Basra to Karachi and Calcutta. It will be monsoon season in India, and the flyers will not attempt to cross Burma, but will follow the coast to Rangoon and thence to Saigon and Hong Kong.

At Tokyo the engine will probably be changed and the flight continued via the Siberian coast and the Aleutian Islands to Alaska, and thence across Canada and the United States to New York. At this stage of the journey, the third engine will probably be used. The flight will be continued to Newfoundland, and from there an attempt will be made to cross the Atlantic Ocean.

NEW ATLANTIC ROUTE. An entirely new route across the Atlantic will be tried. Instead of proceeding direct or via the Azores, the course will be set for Greenland and Iceland, then to Scotland. The late Sir Ross Smith had not decided whether he would fly across the Atlantic direct from Newfoundland or whether he would cross by way of the Azores.

Major Blake says he will have sufficient tankage to cover a range of 1,500 miles, which will be nearly double his longest flight over the sea. The machine will be fitted with wireless for communication. In addition to the ordinary food supplies to be carried there would be emergency rations for three days.

Captain Norman, who is accompanying Major Blake, was with him on his flight to Morocco on behalf of the Daily News last autumn, and is regarded as one of the best air pilots in the country. Major Blake has flown all over Europe, and last summer flew to Russia to investigate the famine conditions there.

The around-the-world flight is being financed by a British syndicate.

The longest flight up to the present time was made by the late Sir Ross Smith from England to Australia, a distance of 11,000 miles, also by Parrer and Mackintosh. Major Blake estimates the distance of his intended flight around the earth at about 30,000 miles.

Statistics of Nfld. Agriculture

(Canadian Press Despatch)

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld., May 20.—While statistics of agriculture production in Newfoundland derived from the recent census returns show a large increase in monetary values over 1911 and 1901, they do not indicate an increase in quantity production. According to the census taken last year, the agricultural production was valued at $14,252,090, compared with $7,137,238 in 1911, and $6,830,825 in 1901. The increase in valuation is said to be due to increased prices rather than an increase of the output of the farms of the island. Practically all the root crops were smaller in 1921 than 1901 and horned cattle, goats and swine also showed a decrease. Poultry showed an increase of 20,000 over 1901, but a decrease compared with 1911. Horses also showed a substantial increase in numbers.

A fact brought out by the returns is that though the island has 43,000 horses and horned cattle and 100,000 goats and sheep, the total hay production last year was only 50,400 tons.

As the Governments during the past two decades have made considerable efforts to encourage agriculture these figures have proved a disappointment. They indicate that Newfoundland is likely to continue for some time to come a large importer of agricultural products.

The Lure of Gold Or The Heart Of A Woman

CHAPTER XXXII.

The Abduction.

"Reuben," she cried gladly, "you have come back to England at last! My father is away; but he, too, will be overjoyed to see you. Come, won't you sit down?"

Her voice had fallen just a little, for Reuben had scarcely advanced beyond the door; though, as the poor fellow gazed at her sternly—as Olive thought—it was as much as he could do not to take her in his arms. Controlling himself, however, with an effort, he answered gravely:

"Miss Seymour, I must apologize for troubling you, but I have a difficult task to perform. If you will trust me just once more—"

She regarded him steadily, and he met the clear, gray eyes with unflinching gaze.

"Yes," she said quietly. "I trust you—always."

"Thank you," he said, with suppressed emotion. "Believe me, I would not come to you like this, were it not a matter of importance—it might have been life and death. I cannot do without your aid, completely; and yet I must beg you to act as I ask unquestionably. Will you?"

"Need you ask?" she said, with almost the shudder of a reproach in her tones. "After what you have already done for me, there is nothing I would not do to show my trust in you."

"Thank you," he said again. "I will show you that your trust in me has not been misplaced. But now there is no time to lose. I have a carriage waiting outside; will you put on warm wraps and come with me?"

Without hesitation, Olive said, "Yes, Reuben," as though he had asked her to do the most ordinary thing in the world; but, as she passed him on her way to the door, Reuben could have sworn that he felt her hand pressed against his cheek and kissed the ground she walked upon for that very faith of hers in him.

He bowed respectfully, as he opened the door for her, saying in a low tone:

"Can you dress in ten minutes?"

"Five," she said promptly, and left Reuben to count the precious moments which stood between him and the execution of his plan for her preservation.

The five minutes had barely elapsed when she returned, dressed in a long rough travelling coat and cap. She was pale, but resolute; and her heart beat madly and she longed to ask a thousand questions, she remained calm and speechless as they passed through the hall to the carriage.

Reuben assisted her in with tender solicitude; and then, with a few words to the driver, who was none other than old Wynter himself, he sprang on the box and the horses dashed forward.

It is difficult to describe Olive's state of mind, as she sat alone in the carriage, which was bearing her away from home and all that she held dear; whether she knew not, nor when she would return. Trust, sublime faith in the man she termed her hero, unquestioning faith in him battled and conquered doubt and curiosity. She had promised to obey with out a question, and she had kept her word.

Halfway to the Grange there was the sound of another carriage approaching from the opposite direction; it was that of Sir Edwin, returning to the Hall. Olive felt her conveyance pulled up sharply, and in another minute Reuben opened the door.

"Miss Seymour," he said gently, "I expect this is Sir Edwin returning from the Grange." He smiled slightly at her look of surprise at such knowledge on his part. "I am going to stop the carriage; I want you to persuade your father to accompany you on your journey. I assure you it is not far, but I don't want him to be alarmed. Can you do this?"

"I think so," said Olive. "Do you still trust me?" he asked, more for the sake of hearing her sweet voice than because he doubted her.

"You know I do," she said, then rose to descend from the carriage, just as the other one came up along side.

To say that Sir Edwin was surprised at this sudden apparition of his daughter, whom he had believed to be safe in her own room, was to put it mildly; but it was overcome in his delight at recognizing Reuben. Like Olive herself, the old man accepted his statement and desire to help them without a question, and, accordingly, the Bingleigh carriage was sent on its way empty, with a message to the household, while Sir Edwin, having seated himself beside his daughter, was borne off into the darkness.

On and on went the carriage, till at length it drew up just beyond a wood. Reuben came to the door with a basket, from which he procured wine and sandwiches. With gentle courtesy, he insisted upon Olive and her father taking refreshment, though he refused to join them, but climbed to the box again, and the carriage whirled on at even faster pace than before.

Sir Edwin sipped the wine gratefully, then leaned back in his seat, and dozed. To Olive it seemed as if the past few months had slipped away, and they were once more in the Australian bush, with Reuben riding at their side.

On, on again they sped, thru the solitary night till, as the crimson morning dyed the east, she looked out thru the humid windowpane, and saw that they were near a house on the outskirts of a town; in another moment the horses paused in their long course.

Reuben who had jumped from the box, gave a keen look at the house, then came toward Olive.

"We have been running a race—and we have won!" he said.

The house was an old-fashioned one; and on its front door was a brass plate inscribed, Reverend James Davis. The door was opened by that gentleman himself, who seemed to stand in great awe of Reuben.

"Come in," he said, in low tones. "You are in time."

Reuben turned to Sir Edwin and Olive, bidding them enter. The Reverend James Davis, with a bow, led the way down a narrow passage and opened a door.

"This is the room," he said, in a whisper, "and—and you will protect me, sir—will you not?"

"You are safe while you play me fair," was Reuben's reply.

With another bow, Mr. Davis left the room, and Reuben placed a chair for Olive near the couch, to which he silently motioned Sir Edwin. Puzzled, but silent, the father and daughter seated themselves; and Olive looked around her.

The room was a back parlor, divided from the front by folding doors. Reuben had at once gone over and tried, to see whether they were locked or not. Apparently he was waiting for some one; for he stood by them, alert and listening. In a few minutes the sound of carriage wheels was heard outside the front door, and Reuben with a sigh of satisfaction, tiptoed over to the other two, and whispered earnestly:

"Listen, but whatever you hear, don't utter a sound."

In another minute footsteps were

It was locked; and with a curse on his withered lips, he turned at bay. The whole thing had taken but a few minutes; and Sir Edwin, who had at first been utterly bewildered, suddenly seemed to understand its meaning.

"You villain!" he said, advancing to the shrinking Morgan. "You villain! This plot was yours, the husband of my child! No not if I starved in the streets."

Morgan stood, white and trembling, the cold beads of fear upon his brow. "The game's up," he breathed hoarsely. "We've been sold by you. He glanced viciously at Topsy, who now clung to her young mistress. "If I had known, I would have killed you!" (To be continued)

Finding Out Who's Who

—By C. M. PAYNE

Inspiring Service Unveiling of Grand Memorial Window

A memorial window of unusual grandeur was unveiled at St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church yesterday by His Excellency the Governor.

The service opened with Guilman's Funeral March as an organ prelude, after which the Invocation, "Holy, Holy, Holy," was sung by the congregation, and a selected psalm preceded the Lesson which was taken from Revelations, Chapter 2. A prayer and Hymn 311, "How bright these glorious spirits shine," followed, and thereafter His Excellency, after a brief expression of his purpose, unveiled the window. The Dedication Prayer was uttered by the Rev. F. S. Coffin, B.A., of Hr. Grace Kipling's immortal Recessional, "Lest We Forget," was sung in fitting sequence. Oliver Wendell Holmes hymn, "Lord of all Being," was the second Anthem, the solo part being taken by Mr. A. R. Stansfield. After the sermon "Fight the good fight of Faith" was sung by the congregation. The Hallelujah Chorus was inspiring; rendered, and the Benediction by the Pastor, followed by a choral blessing, brought the service to a close. Gounod's Military March being played as the congregation dispersed. The Choirmaster and Organist, Mr. Moncreiff Mawer, has just reason to be proud of the choir, the choir to be proud of their leader, and the congregation of both.

SERMON BY REV. R. J. POWER, M.A.

The sermon preached by the Pastor was well attuned to the Memorial Window over whose triple lights were encircled the words quoted in the Lesson: "Be thou faithful unto death."

He said in part: "This service will remind many of us of our Memorial Service which took place about this time last year and which was generally regarded as one of the most beautiful and uplifting services ever held in this Church. At that time we unveiled and dedicated our Memorial Tablets—one erected by the Newfoundland Highlanders to their comrades and the other by the members of our Church to the men of the congregation. So this is not another memorial service. We have met simply to unveil and dedicate this window. If you turn to the window you will find my text and also my sermon. But before going on to that allow me to say a few words about the designers and makers of the window. "A. Ballantine & Sons" is one of the oldest and largest firms in Scotland in this business. Some of the finest windows in the most famous churches in the old land came from their workshops. The principal of the firm—Mr. J. Ballantine—was particularly interested in the window and showed that by personally visiting the city in its interest. As a returned man himself—having served as a Lieutenant in the Artillery; and as a warm and personal friend of one of the young men whom the window commemorates, he was more than anxious that it should be a fitting memorial and so his very best was put into it. The text (Rev. 2: 10) 'Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown of life' forms the theme of the whole design.

In the left hand light or panel the central figure is that of a young man scarcely more than a lad. His face is one of wondrous sweetness and purity; and it speaks of a lofty and noble soul. It reminds us of the face of Christ in Holman Hunt's "Boy in the Temple." In front of him is an open book—the Book of Life. In the distance can be seen his native hills and waters, but his mind stretches away beyond these. He is thinking of what is taking place in Europe and is trying to decide what his duty is. He remembers that battles have been fought for ambition and power and revenge. Not all wars have been just—what about this one?

It was in the early weeks of the war when our Empire had hardly recovered from the first shock of the news that I attended a great service in the City Temple, London. The speaker was the Rev. R. J. Campbell, then recognized by many as the voice of the Free Churches. He had been laid aside by sickness and had made no pronouncement regarding the war. To-day he was to speak on that subject for the first time. All London was eager to hear what he might say. In a very quiet, steady voice he began "I have not yet recovered from the shock of the news. For a time I was dumb, bewildered, unbelieving. I have always been an advocate of peace. To my mind war is the greatest blot on our civilizations. But I never was an advocate of peace at any price. There are things that justify war. Honor is worth fighting for. The maintenance of one's plighted word is another thing worth fighting for. The defence of a small nation; the assertion of public law; the safeguard of righteousness—these things justify war. I remember how anxiously I awaited the whole story. My one concern was "Is Britain's cause right?"

That is the concern of the young man we are thinking about. That is what is troubling him. In his momentous decision he is assisted by the venerable figure standing behind him,—representing experience and wisdom, and by the angels above him with lighted torch,—representing the Light which lighteth every man who cometh into the world.

"At last" continued Doctor Campbell, "it came through and my question was answered. I read of Sir Edward Grey's patient, persistent, almost frantic efforts to avert war. I read all about the 'scrap of paper,' all about the appeal of Belgium and my mind was made up. Our course was right." And that, too, was the decision of this lad in the window and I think he fairly represents the lads to whose memory this window is erected. These lads did not go because of the excitement, to get rid of a monotonous job. Life for the great majority is a very hum-drum affair. The daily round can become very irksome. And many joined up to get away from the dullness of the routine. Some, again went because they were born fighters. They loved a scrap and gloried in the pomp and circumstances of war. And a few sought glory. But not so these boys. They went because duty called. They felt that liberty was at stake. They felt that honour and righteousness were jeopardized and because they could do no other they went gladly, grandly.

In the right hand light or panel, our young man has taken his sword and fist against the mailed hand. That is buckled in his armour. The dark background and red glow are expressive of the turmoil of battle. The hero. The crusaders of 1914 triumph flames have crept to his very feet. But in doing so many a fair crusader has perished.

The Central light or panel represents the artist has endeavored to here portrayed is not the soldier but the crusader. This figure carries us back to Peter the Hermit and to the 12th and 13th centuries, to those mighty movements in which hosts of men flung themselves upon the Holy Land in desperate, but futile efforts to wrest from the hand of the Saracen the Tomb of our Lord. When we hear of the Crusaders we sometimes think of the madness and the superstition, and the cruelty, but these things were only accidents, excrescences. They did not constitute a part of the crusade idea. In every crusade there are only three permanent distinguishing elements. First, a definite, clear-cut goal. Second, a passionate enthusiasm which burns up in its white flames all lesser ambitions and counts no cost too great and no sacrifice too awful if only the desired goal can be attained. And third loyalty to one supreme commander. These are the three fundamental features of the dazzling and unparalleled phenomena of eight centuries ago. There was a goal,—the rescue of the Holy Land. There was loyalty to Jesus Christ as the Supreme Commander—every Crusader was baptized into the name which is above every name and marched under the banner of the Cross. Here our lads are commemorated as crusaders and crusaders they were. They were not soldiers in the ordinary sense of the term. A soldier is one whose business is to fight, and for that he is paid, for that he exists, for that he is trained. But the lads came from our schools and colleges and countinghouses, from our farms, factories and fisheries. They were not soldiers but Crusaders. What was the goal? The liberation of the world from the German Saracen. The Kaiser had set out to bring under his iron heel the whole of mankind and he waged a war that for brutality and hellishness put the Saracen of the 12th century to shame. It was under the banner of the Cross that our boys marched. We see that clearly now. History will record it so. We have now come to identify that cause with the cause of Christ; it was the mailed

Theatricals at Bell Island

Local Players Staged "Lights of London" for C. L. B. Benefit.

Under the auspices of the C. L. B. the charming little play "Lights of London" was staged in the Armoury at Bell Island on Empire Night. Every available chair in the hall was occupied and even standing room was at a premium. The performance was a remarkable success inasmuch as one of the leading ladies—Miss B. Jackman—was taken seriously ill on the afternoon of the show, and was unable to attend. Her part was taken at the last moment by Miss Marion Godden, who, notwithstanding all the difficulties, did excellent work.

Miss Annie Murphy also took the role of "Bennett" at equally short notice, and gave a faithful performance. The costumes were particularly bright and attractive, the fetching gowns of the ladies and the evening dress of the gentlemen, making a pretty picture in the second act. In fact, the stage, with its bright lights and attractive furniture, was an artistic scene all through the play and showed good taste. Following was the cast of characters,—

Mrs. Alicia Egerton—Mrs. W. Lindsay. Edith, her daughter—Miss M. Godden. Bennett, the maid—Miss A. Murphy. Maggie O'Connell—Miss M. News. Michael, her brother—Capt. L. Murphy.

Algy—Mr. W. R. Shepherd. Hon. Cyril Gifford—Mr. R. Burnham. Chester Brent—Mr. H. Gover. Monty Bokes—Mr. Chas. Peddle. Jarvis—Mr. P. T. Murphy.

In such a well balanced cast it may seem invidious to special mention, but Mrs. W. Lindsay unquestionably sustained all her previous laurels, and Miss Madge News as the young Irish American girl, gave a most faithful and talented portrayal.

Between the acts selections were rendered by the C. L. B. Band under Sergt. W. J. Martin, while the little "Peggy"—Misses Jean Lindsay, Betty Lynch, Millicent News and Mary News—once more sang and danced themselves into the hearts of the audience. Miss B. English was accompanist.

General dancing, which commenced at 10.45 and lasted until the wee sma' hours were reached, rounded out a cheerful Empire Day programme which was really enjoyable.

ST. JOHN'S, NEWFOUNDLAND, MONDAY, MAY 29th, 1922.

What of Cooperation?

Now that the Government have announced that the policy of guaranteeing fishery supplies which was followed last year is not to be followed this year, we presume that all those who kicked so strenuously against this policy, especially those in business who objected to supplying if guarantees were to be given, will show by their works that they are prepared to help out in the supply business to the best of their ability.

It has to be recognized that a lot of the difficulty in many sections of the Island is caused by the fact that either the merchants have disappeared from these places or that they will not supply. Under these circumstances it can readily be seen that in some sections the difficulties faced by fishermen are very real. It is for the merchants to take hold and instead of being pessimistic about the future of Newfoundland, endeavour to find ways and means, to carry on "business as usual," because it is only by industry that prosperity will return to us.

The responsibility this year is great upon the Fish Exporters. They are unrestricted by any rules and regulations regarding export of fish, they are in the position they wanted, but we have yet to hear that they are working overtime to make the value of fish as high as it might be. They might work to make it a profitable year for themselves, and by buying only the fish they want, and dealing with a limited quantity, they may do what they will call "a safe business" and hug themselves at their skill in so doing. But there is a bigger way of doing things, there is a more patriotic course to pursue. There is a course under which fishermen would exert themselves to get more fish and under which all could be exported and obtain higher prices for all concerned, and this is the plan of cooperative marketing.

We have shown what New Zealand has been doing in the formation of a Meat Pool, we have dealt with the Wheat Pool of Australia, and the huge proposal that a British Wheat Pool be formed. All this shows the trend of world events, and Newfoundland should not lag behind.

Here is a message from London which tells that New Zealand is considering a compulsory organization to handle all exports of dairy produce:

LONDON, May 19.—The conference of fifty delegates representing the dairy producers of the whole Dominion unanimously passed a resolution approving a proposal to establish a compulsory Dominion organization to control effectively the handling, distribution and marketing of New Zealand's exports of dairy produce, says a Reuter cable from Wellington, New Zealand.

Then again we print the following which shows what a Conservative Australian paper thinks of the Wheat Pool, which secured for the farmers there financial results which could not have been otherwise obtained.

STATE WHEAT POOL (Western Mail)

The more the State meddles in matters which are properly subjects of private concern, the less effectively can it perform the true functions of government. This, however, is not to say that the State Wheat Pool has not justified itself, or that it should be lightly cast upon the scrap heap. It owes its existence to very special circumstances. Although at the outset it did not meet with a kindly reception from a great number of farmers, there are few today who will deny that its operations have been of incalculable benefit to the farmers. Without the co-operation of the Commonwealth and the States in organization the wheat marketing for the growers in Australia during the war period, the farming industry today would be in a very much worse position than it is. The war rendered some such expedient as was devised imperatively necessary, and not for the farmers only, but for the economic salvation of the country. That mistakes were made, and that there was for a time gross mismanagement in some of the States, will not be denied, but on the whole the scheme undoubtedly made for the stability of the industry, and secured to the farmers financial results that could not in the circumstances have been otherwise obtained.

On this side of the water we have shown the inestimable advantage of cooperative effort in marketing Canadian apples and other commodities. The following extract from a Vancouver paper shows that the provinces to the west are waking up to the fact that not only can Canada profit by Control of Wheat but by cooperation in fruit and vegetables.

Why should Newfoundland be last in this race for profitable marketing of the produce of the land and sea. What are the Exporters going to do about it?

CO-OPERATION (Vancouver Province)

No group of producers have more need of co-operation, or can gain more by it than a community of fruit and vegetable growers like those of the Okanagan Valley. In the main they produce the same commodities for the same markets, and forward their products by the same routes. They have the same problems of packing, grading, storage, freight rates and distribution, sales and collections. No class of producers would suffer more by competition among themselves, congested markets, slaughter of perishable goods, shipments at the wrong time or to the wrong place, and the wrong persons. None can gain more by organized, methodical, well-considered and expert salesmanship.

To-morrow we shall show how a strangle hold at present is squeezing the life out of the fishing industry.

OBITUARY

WILLIAM J. HERDER

In the death of Mr. W. J. Herder, Proprietor of the Evening Telegram, Newfoundland has lost the Nestor of its journalists, and one who has crowded into a busy span of over three score years and ten, all the duties pertaining to newspaper life from a printer's boy to the Proprietor of one of our most successful dailies. Mr. Herder has worked up to his present position aided only by his undaunted energy and his never ceasing attention to the business which now he leaves to his sons, building the Evening Telegram up from a little 8 x 12 sheet to its present large proportions. The paper is a monument that stands as an epitome of his life-work, and it may perhaps be said that he gave the best he had to his work, and disdaining leisure that possibly might have been of benefit to his health, has passed direct from his office to the Larger Room beyond, leaving behind an example of industry and application that cannot but be an inspiration to us all.

During the 43 years that the "Telegram" has been in existence, Mr. Herder has been constantly at his desk, following each detail of the paper's "make up," directing the contents of each page and overseeing all the many details that go to make up a day's work in a newspaper office. No one scanned the result more critically and was more proud when he thought an especially good paper was issued. To his custom of "keeping on the job" is due the success which he attained.

When under 30 Mr. Herder became foreman with Mr. Joseph Woods, editor and publisher of the Courier, published in a little building occupying the site on which the upper end of the Crosbie Hotel now stands. In 1877 the Courier suspended publication, but continued to run as a job office. Two years later Mr. Herder and Mr. A. A. Parsons, the former as business manager and foreman and the latter as editor, launched the baby Telegram, publishing from the Courier office. It was a laborious process printing on the old fashioned Washington Press by hand power. From the initial issue success followed. The early issues were the handiwork and brain work of Messrs. Herder and Parsons. Indeed, for long months Mr. Parsons, the editor, not merely wrote the editorials and much of the news, but set the former up with his own hands. The next forward step was the introduction of a small hand-worked Rotary, but its powers were soon outgrown and a Babstock Cotterell was established, and the office transferred in 1880 or 1881 to Gregory's Lane. Thereafter circulation increased rapidly and when the fire of 1892 destroyed the premises the present building was erected, and in 1893 the first issue of the modern Telegram appeared, a shed on Duckworth St., near Calver's store on the beach, having been occupied in the interim. Mr. Parsons retired from the editorship in 1903.

A few months ago Mr. Herder was persuaded to take a well-earned holiday and with Mrs. Herder went to Bermuda. While there his general health improved rapidly and he was the life of the many companions inevitably drawn around him by his genial presence. Unfortunately on his way home, Mr. Herder caught a severe cold, pneumonia developed, and though he recovered, it was felt that much of the benefit which had been gained on the trip south had been neutralized. Recently he had been able to get out for a short while on fine days, but on Sunday morning at noon, he quietly expired in one of the alternating attacks of heart weakness which had developed since his return.

Mr. Herder is survived by his widow, formerly Miss Elizabeth Barnes of this city, four sons, William, Augustus and Ralph, of the Evening Telegram, and James a student at Pictou Academy, now on his way home, also three daughters, the Misses Elsie, Jean and Phyllis, all of whom with the one exception were privileged to be with the husband and father beloved during his last days. Arthur Herder died of wounds received at Cambrai on Dec. 3, 1917, and Hubert was amongst those gallant lads who fell at Beaumont Hamel, on July 1st, 1916. One brother also survives.

To the sorrowing family we tender our sincere sympathy, joining with all other newspapers in the regret that comes from the Craft which Mr. Herder served so faithfully and so well. In 1911 he attended as Newfoundland's sole representative, the First Imperial Press Conference in England, and the friends made then will, we

Masonic Service at The Cathedral

The Masonic Service in behalf of the Tasker Educational Fund was held yesterday afternoon in the Church of England Cathedral, the preacher being the Rev. Bro. Clarence A. Moulton, L.Th. of St. Thomas's Parish.

Amongst those present were Rt. Rev. the Bishop of Newfoundland, Rev. Bro. Canon Bolt, Rev. Canon Bayly, Rev. Bros. Earp and Pike and Brinton.

The service opened with the Processional Hymn "Blessed City, Heavenly Salem," followed which prayers were recited by Rev. Bro. Brinton, and Psalms 122 and 133 sung. The lessons were read by Rev. Bros. Pike and Bolt respectively, and further prayers recited by Rev. Bro. Earp, following which the Anthem "Blessed be the God" (Wesley) was rendered by the choir.

Rev. Bro. Moulton preached a most excellent and appropriate sermon from the text "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, To visit the fatherless and the widows in their affliction and to keep himself unspotted from the world"—James 1:27. Religion observed the preacher, was the primary need of men, and in all ages and among all peoples there had been a recognition of the Divine. It was seen when Cain and Abel made an offering to the Lord, when the Athenians erected an altar to the Unknown God, and it was so today; and though agnosticism, materialism and indifference led them away from the practice of religion, in their hearts of hearts they realized the influence of a Higher Power.

In his concluding words the preacher affirmed that the fundamentals of Freemasonry, Brotherly Love, Relief and Truth were synonymous with the Apostle's declaration of what true religion was and he paid a fitting tribute to the splendid work which had been accomplished by the Craft through the agency of the Tasker Educational Fund.

On returning to the Temple a vote of thanks to the Rev. Bro. Moulton the clergy who took part in the service, the Churchwarden, Organist and Choir was passed, and gracefully responded to by Mr. Moulton. R. W. District Grand Master Duder who presided announced that the collection had reached a substantial figure. Before the brethren separated reference was made to the sad news that a brother beloved, Mr. W. J. Herder had passed away at noon, and tributes were paid to his memory.

Empire Settlement

(London Times)

The Empire Settlement Bill, which was read a second time last week, makes an all-important step in the history of Imperial development. No longer is migration to be left to the courage of the British settler on the one hand or to the varying policy of the Dominions on the other. Clearly it has become a matter for cooperative action within the Empire and the carefully-drawn provisions of the bill appear to go far in making such action possible. In a lucid and informing speech Mr. Amery explained its objects. The British Government is to spend £1,000,000 per annum on the provision of passage money for intending settlers, and another £2,000,000 on actual settlement and development, the expenditure to be contingent on the Dominions contributing a like amount. Such important matters as the testing and training of migrants before they leave this country as well as the special claims of women and children, receive due consideration, and the valuable experience gained in the overseas settlement of ex-service men has evidently not been without result. Mr. Amery did not dwell unduly on the sentimental and patriotic aspects of the case, which must inevitably occur to those who have the welfare of the Empire at heart. He placed the Bill before the House as a sound business proposal. It is not claimed that it will provide an immediate panacea for unemployment in this country. Yet there is no denying the impressiveness of the figures quoted by Mr. Amery to show the amount that had been saved to the country by the provision of free passages to 50,000 ex-service men and their families, whose retention in this country would have added to the unproductive expenditure of unemployment doles. Nor is it pretended that the Bill will result in the automatic redistribution of the Empire's population. Yet the annual expenditure of £1,000,000 (with a corresponding contribution from the Dominions) will pay the passages of between 60,000 and 80,000 migrants from these shores. Mr. Amery has sufficient confidence in the success of his scheme to share in the hope of so many others that the expenditure contemplated will, in the near future, be looked upon as quite inadequate for so great a project.

Rice-Jones on Wheat Board

United Manager of United Grain
Growers Limited Presents
Strong Case for Board

A strong case in favor of the re-establishment of the Canadian Wheat Board to market the crop of 1922 was made by C. Rice-Jones, vice-president and general manager of the United Grain Growers, Limited, before the agricultural committee of the House of Commons, at Ottawa, on April 29.

Mr. Rice-Jones, who appeared as a member of the executive of the Canadian Council of Agriculture, as well as a representative of the U.G.G., first referred to the distressed condition of the agricultural industry in Western Canada, and said he thought everyone would agree that the restoration of prosperity to agriculture was a national question. He pointed out that wheat formed from 25 to 30 per cent. of the total exports of the country, and urged that it was in the national interest that the farmer should be enabled to secure the largest possible net returns for his crop. The farmers, he said, were dissatisfied with the present system of marketing. They did not feel that the wheat was being marketed to the best advantage on the markets of the world, and they believed that there was too much spread between the price that the producer received and the price that the consumer paid. There was an unnecessary profit taken by speculators, and it was beyond dispute that a large volume of wheat could be more economically marketed by a single agency than by a large number of traders.

The Present System.

"I contend," he said, "that the wheat crop is not marketed on a scientific commercial basis. It is practically just dumped out in a heap, and the buyers come and take it at the price that they set. Seventy-five per cent. of it is thrown on the market in the fall. It is thrown on the market regardless of whether the market is in a position to absorb it or not. My contention is that that is not marketing grain; it is merely dumping it out, and if agriculture is going to be put on a paying basis, I feel very strongly that not only wheat, but all the products of the farm, have got to be marketed on a good deal more scientific and commercial basis in the future than they have been in the past."

The farmer, Mr. Rice-Jones claimed, was not to blame for dumping his wheat on the market in the fall, because his financial position did not permit him any choice. He was forced by his creditors to dump it on the market at the earliest possible time, regardless of whether there was a demand for it or not. The result was that advantage was taken of the situation by speculators to buy the wheat at a low price and reap the profit that should accrue to the grower of the grain.

A Trader's Market.

Even the farmers' company which represented did not have an opportunity to market the farmer's grain in the strict sense of the word. They could only follow the farmer's instructions and sell it to the best advantage when he gave the order. When the grain left the farmer's hands it passed into the control of dealers and speculators who were in a position to actually market the grain. The interest of those engaged in the grain trade, Mr. Rice-Jones pointed out, was, naturally enough, to make a profit for themselves, and it was not reasonable to expect that they would particularly worry themselves about securing for the farmers the best price obtainable on the world's market for the whole crop. Consequently the grain trade, however efficient its members might be from their own standpoint, could never take the place of a marketing system working for the farmer and acting as his marketing agency.

Supply and Demand.

Mr. Rice-Jones also dealt at length with the argument that the present system was fair to the farmer because it gave to him the world's price for his wheat, which was the most he could obtain under any system. It was intimated, he said, that the law of supply and demand regulated the world's price, that that price was represented by the Liverpool market, and that the Winnipeg market followed Liverpool. In a general way, he said, that was correct, but it was not correct in its entirety. There was a stage in between the time when the grain left the farmer's hands and when it reached the markets of the world, and there were intermediate influences which interfered with the farmer securing the world's price for his grain.

In support of this contention, Mr. Rice-Jones quoted from the report of W. Sanford Evans on the Georgian Bay Canal Commission, and produced diagrams compiled by Mr. Evans, showing first that a very large part of the Canadian wheat crop was sold by the farmers in the last three months of the year, and that there were at different times of the year great differences in the spread between Liverpool and Winnipeg prices. The charts submitted showed also that at the time when deliveries by the Canadian farmers are highest, the Winnipeg price is much lower, compared with the Liverpool quotation, than at other seasons of the year, which made it clear that the present method of marketing does not give results to the producer in accordance with the general law of consumption demand.

A Temporary Proposition.

It was to eliminate speculative profits, to save this money for the producers of the grain, and to market the crop on a commercial basis, that the farmers were asking for the re-establishment of the Wheat Board. Eventually the farmers desired to organize a pooling system of their own, and a committee of the Canadian Council of Agriculture had worked on that proposition for some months, but owing to several crop failures the farmers were in such a financial position that a voluntary pool would be inadequate to meet the conditions. Consequently they were asking for the re-establishment of the Wheat Board as a temporary proposition for one year, to tide things over until they could organize a pool of their own.

Another point advanced by Mr. Rice-Jones was that under the present system there were thousands of individual farmers competing with each other in selling their wheat to a comparatively few buyers. While this condition existed, he said, the buyers would get the best of the bargain every time.

Grain Dealers' Opposition.

Dealing with the opposition to the Wheat Board proposal by the Grain Exchange, Mr. Rice-Jones said: "There has been some argument made against the compulsory board by the gentlemen who are in the grain business. I must confess I have not heard any very strong argument against it yet. One thing I have not been able to understand. During the old Wheat Board all companies received the same handling charges, and in fact, because the carrying charge on street wheat was taken from the time the elevator took it in, the storage worked out at a little more than a cent in the pre-war period, as far as I remember. I know that our company made just as much profit as they have since, and in fact, slightly more per bushel than we have made some years under the operations of the open market. If there are no concerns in the grain trade that are not making any more then these charges would allow, why are they opposing the re-establishment of the Wheat Board? To my mind there is the fact that under the Wheat Board we made a fair profit per bushel on the grain we handled and showed a fair and reasonable profit at the end of the year. There is no reason that I know of why every other firm on the exchange should not have done the same thing. If that is the case, why are they opposing the re-establishment of the Wheat Board? It would look as if some of them, at least, must have made, in years when we did not have the Wheat Board, more profit

LORD SHAUGHNESSY

ly after several months in the Brit-
Who returned to Montreal recent-than could be made by reasonable handling charges and a reasonable profit on the amount of grain they handled."

Summing up the benefits of the Wheat Board, Mr. Rice-Jones said it would prevent a large volume of wheat being forced on the market in the fall, and the farmers would be able to do more fall work on the land and haul their wheat in winter when they could do it at less cost. Every farmer would get the average price for his wheat, and that would, he contended, be a benefit to the farmer's creditors as well as to himself. There was no doubt, also, that on the whole the spreads between grades would be narrower.

The Legal Question.

Referring to the legal question, he pointed out that in addition to the opinion of the law officers of the Crown that the Wheat Board as formerly established was ultra vires, they had now a decision of the Manitoba Court of Appeal declaring that a section of the Canadian Grain Act dealing with the licensing of grain dealers was ultra vires. To Eastern members he would say that it was absolutely imperative that something be done to re-establish the Grain Act. Without any Grain Act there would undoubtedly be hundreds of mushroom firms and individual grain dealers springing up in the West, with the result that there would be undoubtedly a tremendous loss to the farmers. They had always looked on the Grain Act as the protection of the farmer in the grain business. Now they had it to all intents and purposes declared ultra vires, and when that matter was taken into consideration from a legal standpoint it seemed to him that the Wheat Board should also be considered at the same time.

Modern Adventure.

London Daily Mail: The world may not be so exciting a place as it was to the Elizabethan adventurers, but it still contains many black spots. If there are no longer empires to found, there are secrets to be unravelled. And in proportion as scientific knowledge has advanced, so has the significance of new discoveries become greater. Anybody who can give us new and authentic facts about the world is performing a public service which may always turn out to be of definite value to humanity.

Catholic Citizens Arrange To Honor Archbishop Roche

Catholic citizens in large numbers met in the Nickel Theatre at 8 o'clock last evening to arrange for a fitting celebration of the Sacred Silver Jubilee of His Grace Archbishop Roche which takes place on June 24th.

The Rt. Rev. Monsignor McDermott presided, and on opening the meeting explained the object for which it was called. He referred to this as a very special occasion in the life of His Grace whose twenty-five years of priestly labour had won for him a place in the hearts of all his flock, and it was fitting that all should join in the celebrations befitting the occasion.

After addresses by Mr. W. R. Howley, K.C., Judge Morris and others it was decided that an address and purse of gold be presented to His Grace by the Catholic laity to mark the occasion and that a committee be appointed to carry out the necessary arrangements. This committee was thereupon appointed and the following officers were elected:

Chairman—Hon. J. D. Ryan, K.C.S.G.
Secretary—Mr. J. C. Pippy.
Treasurer—Mr. C. W. Ryan.

C. C. C. Notes

The members of the Athletic Association met after last Mass yesterday. Mr. Jas. Clancey presided. The following were elected as this year's representatives of the football team:

Captain—A. Galgay.
Vice-Captain—M. Maddigan.
Manager—C. Jardine.

The best efforts will be put forward by the team to capture the silverware from the Irish boys this year.

The Quartermaster's Dept. is very busy preparing for the June parade. The Senior Company will be fully equipped for this parade and it is hoped that all reserves will turn out also, and once more the good old Flag, Red, Blue and Red, with its three Red C's across the centre, will proudly float to the breeze as it did before the war, and friends and supporters will say as was said on the other side—Better than the Best.

Hospital News

(Twillingate Sun)

The Hospital Committee of the Twillingate Memorial Hospital met this week to consider a communication from Doctors Grenfell and Parsons and received plans for water line, sewerage, etc., on the site at South Side.

Dr. Grenfell has been given another large donation of $25,000, and is in sight of $10,000 through the influence of Dr. Parsons. These amounts are coming from a large Association in U.S.A. Dr. Grenfell has secured $6,000 worth of Radium, the world-wide remedy for external cancerous growth and will be in the position to grant an allowance for Twillingate Hospital.

Work on the site or the laying out of the necessary pipes, etc., will begin on Monday in charge of Mr. Benjamin Roberts.

No doubt that quite a lot of labor will be given and we hope that men that can work, and need the same, will not be handled as some of our people in the past.

With the hospital and breakwater, which is proposed to be erected this season, much employment will be apparent, which no doubt will aid in the industrial life of Twillingate.

Football League Hold Important Meeting

An important meeting of the Football League was held Saturday night, which was attended by the delegates and the full executive. President Higgins presided and a deputation from the Baseball League, consisting of Messrs. J. B. Orr, F. C. Chesman, A. H. Thomas and C. Hall were also present to discuss with the footballers the matter of arranging for the use of St. George's Field for the coming season.

President Higgins outlined the League's position in the matter, and after some discussion it was decided that the following would be the playing date for the baseballers:

JUNE—On afternoon of June 14th and forenoon of June 22nd.

JULY—All day on July 1st up to 6 p.m. and every Tuesday and Thursday evenings, also any spare Wednesday afternoon.

AUGUST—All Monday evenings and on the evenings of the 3rd, 10th, 17th also the afternoons of the 16th and 23rd.

SEPTEMBER—Every Wednesday afternoon.

The matter of appointing an official referee for the football season was then considered and in view of the fact that Mr. Ern Churchill is unable to act in that capacity this year it was decided to seek elsewhere and an appointment will be announced within a few days. The arranging of the fixtures for the season was also finalized and the opening game will be played on Monday, June 12th, instead of June 5th as at first decided. The complete football fixtures will be published in to-morrow's issue.

WHEN IS A HORSE ILL-TREATED?

There seem to be conflicting opinions as to what constitutes ill-treatment for a horse.

A gentleman of the East End was before court this morning charged with cruelly ill-treating his steed. The horse was brought by the S.P.A. Inspector but the evidence showed that the horse was really ill-treated by its master. In other words the horse, owned and cared for and fed and bathed and bedded by this particular master for the past year, had not done a stroke of work for a year. The charge that should have been brought against the defendant in today's case was that of "spoiling a horse."

Inspector Porter swore that on last Friday evening last at 7.30 he had found the defendant's horse grazing in the midst of a gathering of tin cans on a vacant lot opposite the Fever Hospital. He had tried to catch the horse because it was no night for a respectable horse to be out and besides this horse had a chafe on its shoulder. He could not catch the horse because when he disturbed it, the animal ran. It ultimately wandered to the home of its master and the Inspector wandered after it. The owner met the horse at the door (he had been expecting it) and led it into the basement despite the protestations of the Inspector who wanted to take it elsewhere.

The Inspector told the Court the place where the horse was kept was no fit place for it. The beams overhead were too low for the horse to raise its head, unless the animal got so placed that it could raise its head between the beams. Moreover, the horse had the edges eaten off the beams.

The evidence adduced by Mr. Higgins, K.C., counsel for the defendant, was that the Inspector had been given information about the horse by persons who were not prepared to come into court to prove their case. The horse had been owned by the defendant for but one year, he having bought it to use on a farm which had since been stolen. The horse had, therefore, to remain idle until work could be found for it. Finally one day a job was got for the horse at $20 a month and on the strength of the engagement the horse was given a night out and lo! that knowing steed came back the next morning with a sore on its shoulder. Result was the engagement was perforce cancelled and Mr. Horse continued to lead a life of aimless idleness albeit he was being fed three squares per diem of three courses each with a cup of tea going to bed. When the horse was sore it was bathed and salved, when tired it was laid gently to rest and as for eating the rations, one of the witnesses who had frequently attended to the horse's feeding, said that rations had never been an item on the animal's menu and that if it had eaten such vulgar food it had done so from choice and not from necessity.

That part of the charge touching upon the standing room in the basement-stable was answered by the reminder that a horse which could escape work or a whole year, knew enough to overcome a little thing like hindrance to lifting its head. The case was dismissed.

During the last few weeks there have been several search parties from Maryvale and Georgetown, Conception Bay, searching the woods near Maher's for the body of Henry Poole, aged about 60, who went astray in the first snow storm in last January.
